TWO TOILETS

SOLITUDE REMOVAL
IN THE LAST
PRIVATE REFUGE

WHAT IT IS

Two Toilets is a fixed bathroom installation that replaces the single toilet with two identical units, placed side by side, with no divider between them. Its function is to remove the last domestic space that guaranteed unconditional physical solitude.

This is not a joke about privacy. It is a question about why we need that privacy so badly now that the phone has made its way in there too.

If you're no longer alone even in the bathroom, why do you still need the phone in there?

This is not a serious proposal.
That's exactly the point.

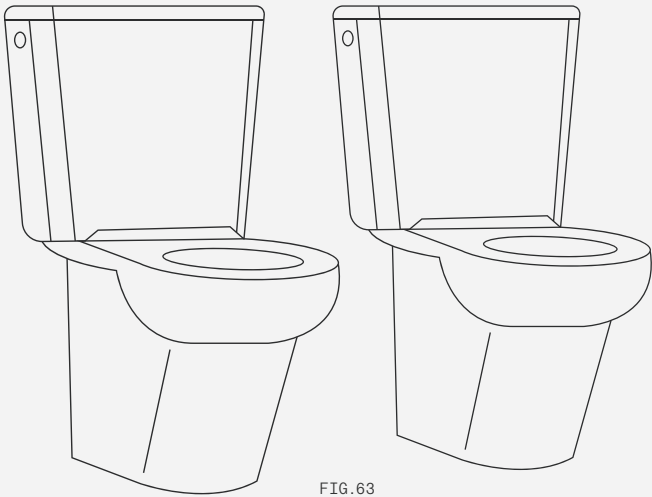

FIG.63

WHY IT WORKS

The bathroom is one of the few spaces where solitude is guaranteed: no one comes in, no one asks, no one interrupts. It is no coincidence that it is one of the places where we spend the most time on our phones: it is precisely where we are alone, and solitude is the condition compulsive use needs to extend itself without friction. We're working from a hypothesis: that phone use drops when there's company. Two Toilets applies that idea to the one room designed to exclude it. If company reduces phone use in other contexts, the bathroom is the perfect place to test it, precisely because it's the hardest room to share. The proposal does not solve the problem, it displaces it until it becomes visible. If the solution to phone addiction involves installing a second toilet, maybe the phone was never really the problem.

ANATOMY OF THE OBJECT

Two Toilets consists of two identical sanitary units, installed at the same height and with the same orientation, separated only by the minimum distance required for simultaneous use. No partition, no screen, no curtain. The absence of separation is structural, not an oversight. The rest of the bathroom remains unchanged: sink, mirror, storage. Only the toilet is duplicated. It is the exact spot where solitude happens that gets intervened upon.

HOW TO USE IT

The procedure for use is as follows.

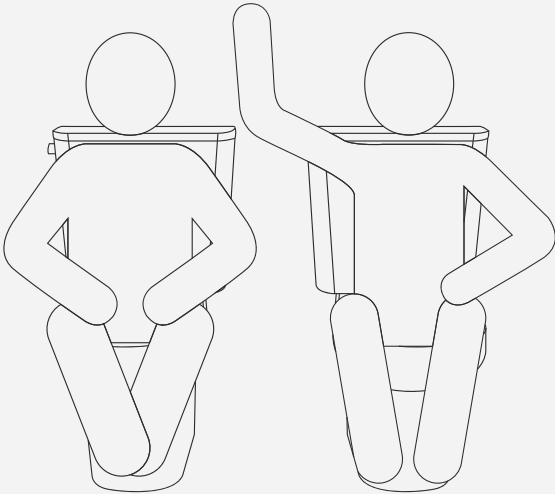

FIG.64

STEP 1 ENTER THE BATHROOM

Enter as you would any conventional bathroom, without checking first whether the second unit is occupied. That's not something you get to plan for.

FIG.65

STEP 2 TAKE A SEAT

Sit on whichever toilet is free. If the other one is occupied, someone is already there. If it isn't, someone may sit down beside you at any moment, with no warning.

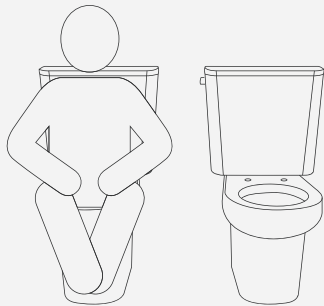

FIG.66

STEP 3 NOTICE WHO'S THERE

A flatmate. A colleague. Someone you weren't expecting to run into right then. There is no script for this moment, because the bathroom has never required one before.

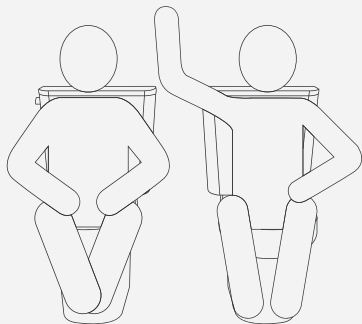

FIG.67

There never used to be anyone here.
Now there might be.

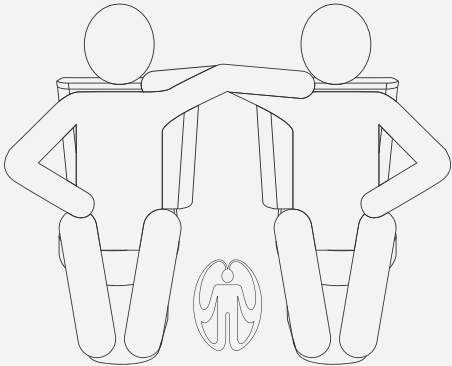

FIG.68

STEP 4 TALK, IF IT HAPPENS

You don't have to start a conversation. But you might. Two strangers, or two people who know each other, sitting side by side with nothing else to do, tend to talk. That conversation is the part of the design that actually works.

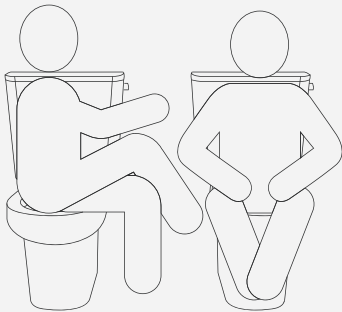

FIG.69

STEP 5 NOTICE THE PHONE YOU DIDN'T TAKE OUT

You came in with your phone in your pocket, as always. At some point you'll realize you never took it out. That is the only instruction Two Toilets really wants to give you.

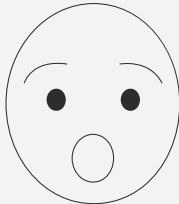

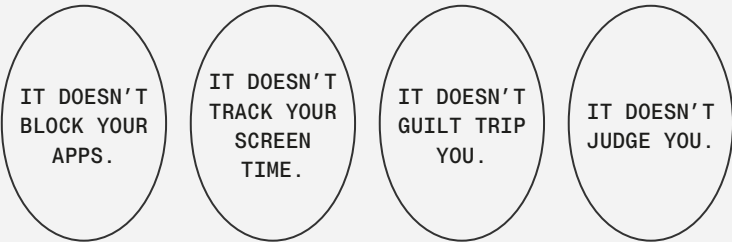

FIG.70

WHEN TO USE IT

Whenever you need to use the bathroom. Two Toilets makes no distinction between urgent needs and moments of deliberate escape – and that lack of distinction is precisely the point. If you only went to the bathroom for twenty guaranteed minutes of scrolling with no one asking questions, this installation makes that strategy far less viable.

WHAT TWO TOILETS DOESN'T DO

Two Toilets doesn't stop you from using your phone.

It doesn't judge you directly – it leaves that to the person sitting next to you.
Nor does it solve anything. It is not a serious design solution to compulsive phone use. It is a mirror: if the idea of installing a second toilet strikes you as absurd or invasive, that is exactly the reaction we should have to the idea of the phone accompanying us everywhere, including the one place that used to be ours alone.

It doesn't take your solitude away.
It makes you notice you'd already lost it.

CURRENT LIMITATION

Two Toilets has no technical limitation whatsoever. It is fully buildable with standard plumbing and sanitary ceramics, available today, with no speculative material or technology required.
Its limitations are social and cultural. The bathroom is one of the most codified private spaces in Western domestic life – a room with a lock, a room that implicitly belongs to whoever is inside.

Sharing it simultaneously violates a norm so deeply embedded that most people struggle to imagine it without discomfort. That discomfort is not incidental to the proposal. It is the proposal.
On a practical level, most domestic bathrooms are not dimensioned for two toilet units side by side – a renovation that adds a layer of friction on top of the social one.

We're all in this together

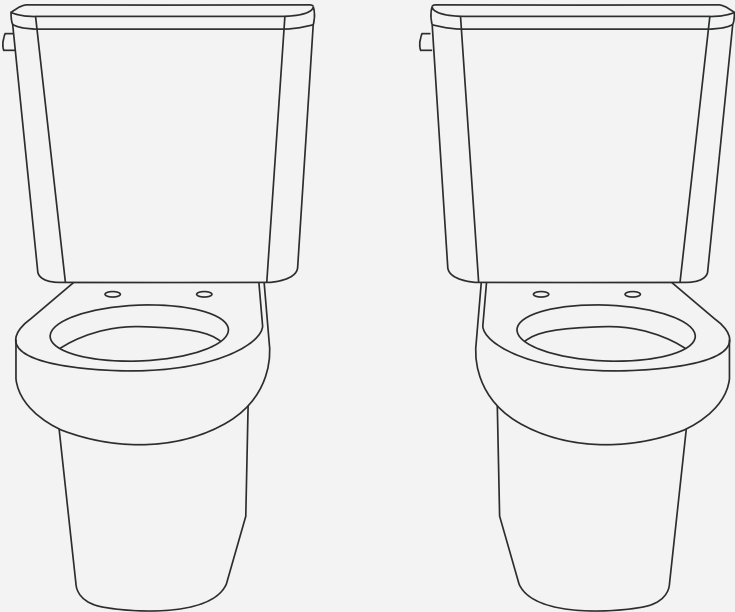

FIG.71

* No one would want this in their home.
Of the eight proposals in this manual,
that is the most honest limitation of all.
